

On June 2nd, I urge you to keep the current media ownership rules.

The amount of original local programing available is already very scarce, this would put the final nail in the coffin. With a few big companies owning the media, where's the competiion? Or the variety? Are we looking at national programing for local radio and tv? To answer my own question, very possibly. I understand how this benefits already large corporations, but what about the public? Isn't the FCC supposed to be serving the public's best interests? I can't possibly see how this serves the public interest.
